

Roadrageous

What is it?

Roadrageous is an 8 hour classroom course addressing the root causes of aggressive driving. Produced by the American Institute for Public Safety, the training combines instruction, skits, games, videos, student-instructor interaction and student-student interaction to help drivers acknowledge their negative driving habits and attitudes. The goal is to give students a “toolkit” to change their behavior and decision making process behind the wheel.

What has Army Safety done?

The Army selected Roadrageous training as a part of its current Army Traffic Safety Training Program. The purpose is to provide driver improvement /remedial training for military or civilian personnel convicted of a moving traffic violation or determined to be at fault for a traffic mishap while operating a government motor vehicle.

What does Army Safety have planned for the future?

The Director of Army Safety encourages Army organizations to implement Roadrageous training as part of their accident-prevention efforts. Roadrageous training is provided to Army organizations through Cape Fox Government Services. Units seeking to obtain the training should contact their garrison safety office.

Why is this important to the Army?

Independent studies have shown Roadrageous training to be effective in reducing collisions by as 64 to 74 percent. Preventing motor vehicle accidents preserves valuable resources while protecting Soldiers and Civilians from injury or death.

Resources:

U.S. Army Combat Readiness/Safety Center home page

<https://safety.army.mil>

Army Regulation 385-10, Oct. 4, 2011

http://www.apd.army.mil/pdffiles/r385_10.pdf

American Institute for Public Safety home page:

<http://www.aipsnews.com/roadrageous.html>

As of: Dec. 12, 2011

POC: Walter Beckman

POC email: walter.k.beckman.civ@mail.mil

POC phone: (334) 255-3039/DSN 558-3039